Travellers' Tales

We asked some people to tell us about their travel experiences.

A	Antonia

So I arrived at this seaside place to spend a couple of weeks relaxing by the sea, but I found that instead of being part of the local culture I was in a resort for Westerners. There were no beach huts but only a hotel, and there was a disco blasting out Western disco music all night, so I was dead tired in the morning. The place was crowded, and they were not my kind of people. But I didn't let it get me down – I just packed my bags and headed into the mountains.

B	Barbara

I've just come back from Tanzania, where I was in a team teaching children how to read and write. It's wonderful to see the kids learn a new skill and become more confident in themselves. The place was a bit risky because of malaria, but I had plenty of medicines around me. I was surrounded by people all day, but in the evening I always tried to get some time for myself and watch glorious sunsets over the Indian Ocean.

C	Charles

I spent a month monitoring endangered chamois goats and their interrelationship with wolves and bears. We spent the days high in the mountains, recording the presence of these animals through direct observation and their tracks, signs and calls. You could hear wolves howling at night, but I soon got used to it. I sometimes spent hours looking at the stars – you don't see that in London. I even managed to do some serious mountaineering, the first time I'd done that. It was quite dangerous, and it really showed me how important it is to be able to rely on the people around you and coordinate everything you do.

D	Derek

While waiting to start my university course, I went to a remote area in Chile for three months on a project to build houses for the local people. I had to do all sorts of things, from helping general construction to pouring cement. I'd never done this before. And a great thing was that I got to know the families who will actually live in these houses. One day, I'll take my children there and say "I helped build that." I was worried about my university course but now with this experience I feel I'll make a success of it.

E	Emma

I was bored watching TV all day so I decided to go somewhere totally different – Africa. I thought it was going to be a fabulous adventure – no advance planning. But when I arrived, I found myself in a really dirty place, with insects everywhere. As for the food, thank goodness there was a McDonald's. And I couldn't understand the language. I was so miserable that I just wanted to go home. So I did.

F	Fred

I spent three months in Ghana on a football programme, working with street children, orphans and children with disabilities. My job was to help organize training sessions and competitions and to give lessons on football tactics. I stayed with a local family, which was a true cultural experience. The food was very different from what I was used to. I also took part in football camps, but I missed one because I had to stay in bed for a couple of days. It must have been something I ate. But working with these children was great. It all gave me a new way of looking at the world.

Task 2
Questions 13-18

Read the article about what some boys do to look good. For questions 13-18, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) that fits best according to the article. Mark your answer on your answer sheet.

Looking Good?

As James Munday, 19, from Kent, prepares for a night out with his friends, the pressure is on. "My mates call me 'pretty boy' – everyone expects me to look good," he says. But things weren't always this way. "At 16," he recalls, "my nickname was 'fatty'. I felt ugly and girls weren't interested in me. When all my mates started dating, I thought, 'I have to change.'

James began an intensive fitness regime. "My fat turned to muscle and girls fancied me," he says. Ironically, the more compliments James got, the more insecure he felt. "I became obsessed with my appearance. I'd go to the gym every day," he says. Yet he was never satisfied with his chest. "I wanted rippling pecs, but I had man-boobs from where I'd lost weight. I wanted surgery."

James first went under the knife at 18. "I had liposuction. I knew it would be painful, but I didn't care." But he was disappointed with the result. "I had two more ops, involving having skin from my chest removed. It's still not perfect, but finally I can take my top off."

Although James is happier with his appearance, he reckons things are as hard for guys as girls. "We're expected to look our best at all times – by girls and our mates. It's getting out of control."

"James isn't the only lad feeling body pressure," says Dr Robert Lawson, a leading fitness expert. He points out that 84% of boys in a recent survey said they believed a better body would improve their life. "What's more, lads are going to dangerous lengths to look good. More than 100,000 teenage boys could be injecting themselves with anabolic steroids – a drug used to build muscle. Steroids are banned in sport, and although it's illegal to sell them in the UK, it's legal to possess them. Yet using them can be incredibly dangerous. They can cause depression and anxiety. Also organ damage, acne, balding and breast tissue development in men."

And lads are taking these to look good?
Ben, 18, has been using steroids since he was 16. "I'm only 1.6m. tall, so lads always picked on me for being small. And it doesn't help to see those body-builders in the deodorant ads on TV. So I started working out at the gym, and became friends with some lads who used steroids. Soon I started injecting them into my leg for better results. In two years, I gained 20 kilos of muscle. Girls became more interested in me and finally lads gave me more respect. But although I felt fitter, I had bad acne and would snap at people for no reason. But you just don't care about the side effects – you just want to look good. It's only now I'm thinking about my career that I'm planning on quitting. I worry girls will stop fancying me if I lose my muscles, and I just haven't gotten round to stopping yet…"

When lads believe it's better to be hunky than healthy, clearly something has gone horribly wrong. If we all (girls too) keep placing so much importance on our bodies, chances are we'll never be happy with them. Then what dangerous lengths will we go to next?

13 According to the first paragraph, James

B thinks he is overweight.

Task 3
Questions 19-24

You are going to read an article about ways of reducing stress before an exam.
Seven sentences have been removed from the article. Choose from the sentences A-H the one which fits each gap (19-24). Mark the correct answer on your answer sheet. There are two letters which you do not need.
There is an example at the beginning (0).

Take the Stress from the Exam

It's only natural to get stressed before an exam. (0) __I__ However, too much stress can be counterproductive. So here are some tips to help you out.

First of all, believe in yourself. You can do it! There's no need to worry too much if you prepare for the exam properly – you will do fine. But don't aim too high and think you have to be perfect. It's great to reach for the stars. (19) ____ Don't think that you've failed if you don't get 100%. Aim to do your best but recognize that none of us can be perfect all of the time.

Take steps to overcome problems. If you find you don't understand some of the course material, getting stressed out won't help you. (20) ____ Finding someone who will be supportive is a great way of reducing stress. You can also try explaining the answers to tricky questions to someone else, or look at past papers and try answering some of the questions.

Whatever you do, don't leave revision to the last minute. (21) ____There's nothing more stressful than working against the clock. And it's difficult to concentrate when you're under stress. Therefore, leave plenty of time to revise so that you are ready ahead of time. (22) ____ Also, it's a good idea to have the evening before the exam free from studying, so you can relax, focus on the next day calmly, go to bed early and wake up ready for the big day.

Develop a timetable so that you can monitor your progress. But make sure you allow time for fun and relaxation so that you avoid burning out. As soon as you notice that you are starting to lose concentration, take a short break. (23) ____ While it's good to develop a routine, everyone revises differently – find out what routine suits you best – alone or with a friend; morning or late at night; short, sharp bursts or longer revision sessions. And be careful not to be a slave to your timetable or you'll begin to hate it. Be flexible and do what works for you.

Try and lead a healthy life. Don't drink too much coffee, tea and fizzy drinks – the caffeine will make your thinking less clear. Eat healthily and regularly; your brain will benefit from the nutrients. Try out some yoga, tai chi or relaxation techniques.
(24) ____ And regular moderate exercise will boost your energy, clear your mind and reduce any feelings of stress.

Finally, don't forget that there is a life beyond revision and exams. And don't forget to go to the toilet before the exam starts!
